Destry Jetton joined Channel 12 as host of Arizona Midday in January 2007. It's a move back home for Destry; she grew up in Tempe, graduating from Tempe High School and Arizona State University where she earned two degrees, one in broadcast journalism, the other in elementary education.

She started her broadcasting career interning in the Channel 12 newsroom and made career stops in St. Joseph, Missouri, Waco, Texas and most recently in Tucson, Arizona. She's done everything from being her own camera person and editor, to anchoring morning and evening newscasts, with some of her best reporting on children's issues.

Destry comes from a big family; she's one of six children; she has a twin sister named Cheyana. She says it must be fate that she works in television as that's how her mother came up with her and her sister's names. When not working on Arizona Midday, you can find Destry spending time her husband Terry and their children Hayden and Blythe.
